

Peter Drucker on the Knowledge Society

“The next society will be a knowledge society. Knowledge will be its key resource, and knowledge workers will be the main dominant group. Its three main characteristics will be:

- Borderless, because knowledge travels even more effortlessly than money
- Upward mobility, available to all through easily acquired formal education
- The potential for failure as well as success.

Together, those three characteristics will make the knowledge society highly competitive”.

Economist.com: The Next Society, November 2001